

Sjogren's Syndrome Patients

MASSACHUSETTS
GENERAL HOSPITAL

HARVARD
Medical School

The Faustman Lab at the Massachusetts General Hospital is accepting Sjogren's Syndrome patients into their clinical study

- We are in the process of developing a blood test to quickly and accurately diagnose Sjogren's Syndrome
- Current methods for correctly diagnosing Sjogren's Syndrome are difficult and can take several years
- Insurance companies could require periodical lip biopsies to maintain medical coverage for Sjogren's patients if better diagnostics are not available
- Our study involves a quick visit to donate a small amount of blood

For more information, contact Elise Hsu, the clinical research coordinator, at 617-726-4084 or autoimmunity@partners.org